The Art of Framing

How a message is presented influences perception. Framing involves emphasizing certain aspects to shape interpretation.

- Positive framing: Highlight benefits or successes.
- Negative framing: Focus on risks or losses.

- Use rhetorical devices like anaphora (repetition at the beginning of sentences).

Rhetorical Questions

Questions posed for effect, not requiring an answer, prompt the audience to think.

Example: "Isn't it time we took action?"

This technique involves the audience emotionally and intellectually.

Analogies and Metaphors

Comparing unfamiliar concepts to familiar ones clarifies ideas and makes messages more persuasive.

Example: Describing a complex policy as "building a bridge to the future" evokes cooperation and progress.
